1 Twitter Analysis Assignment

Keven Michel 02/28/2021

For this assignment, I used the term “healthcare” and the location of South Central Los Angeles, to help analyze tweets within those parameters. Because my current project research has to do with healthcare disparities in Los Angeles, using the term “healthcare” was helpful to understanding how Los Angeles residents feel with their access to healthcare services during this pandemic. I chose the region of South Central Los Angeles because that region has a large percentage of Hispanic and Non-Hispanic Black individuals living in that region as shown in my previous research. My partner focused on the West Los Angeles to compare the higher income and large percentage of Non-Hispanic White individuals.

Is it just me, or is vuln disclosure in healthcare, uh, not great?
450 @ElliottKozuch My most sincere apologies, as I was wrong in the assumption that it was comparable to a regular prescription. I hope it was clear that my intent was not to make you feel bad, rather that I understood the complicated and flawed intricacies of the American healthcare system.

In Figure 1, I produced a wordcloud of the important words said in the Tweets I gathered. One of the biggest words here mentioned is “Worker” followed by “people” and “system.” What does this all mean? The tweets analyzed take place during a current pandemic that has extended for more than a year now. These three terms can be in reference to the recent closures in LA, from restaurants to swimming pools, which has led many workers either without a job or a very limited one. The terms “people” and “system” can be, or can be inferred to be, on the topics of healthcare system. We can use a recent article by the ABC7 News that describes how people of color have received the lowest percentage of covid vaccines compared to their Non-Hispanic White counterparts (<https://abc7.com/people-of-color-southern-california-covid-19-vaccine-disparities/10260561/>). Apart from the three terms mentioned, the rest of the worldcloud helps identify local concerns such as education, vaccines and insurance.

Figure 2 shows us the sentimental analysis on our Twitter term, “healthcare,” in which we analyze the polarity of all the Tweets mentioned. What we were able to gather shows us that most of all the tweets are neutral or positive. In the red we can see that a very few counted were actually negative tweets. Negative could refer to tweets that use negative language, like “hate” or “useless.” What this shows us is how positive the remarks are in these tweets within this region. A good use for this visualization is to develop another chart from a different time period using the same terms and location to understand if there has been any new or different sentiment changes.

1.3 Sentiment Analysis Using a Histogram Chart

[34]: # histogram
num_bins = 50
plt.figure(figsize=(10,6))
n, bins, patches = plt.hist(df.polarity, num_bins, facecolor='blue', alpha=0.5)

```
plt.xlabel('Polarity')
plt.ylabel('Count')
plt.title('Histogram of polarity for "' + searchterm + '"')

plt.axvline(df.polarity.mean(), color='k', linestyle='dashed', linewidth=1)

min_ylim, max_ylim = plt.ylim() plt.text(df.polarity.mean()*1.1, max_ylim*0.9, 'Mean: {:.2f}'.format(df.
    ↪polarity.mean()))

plt.show();

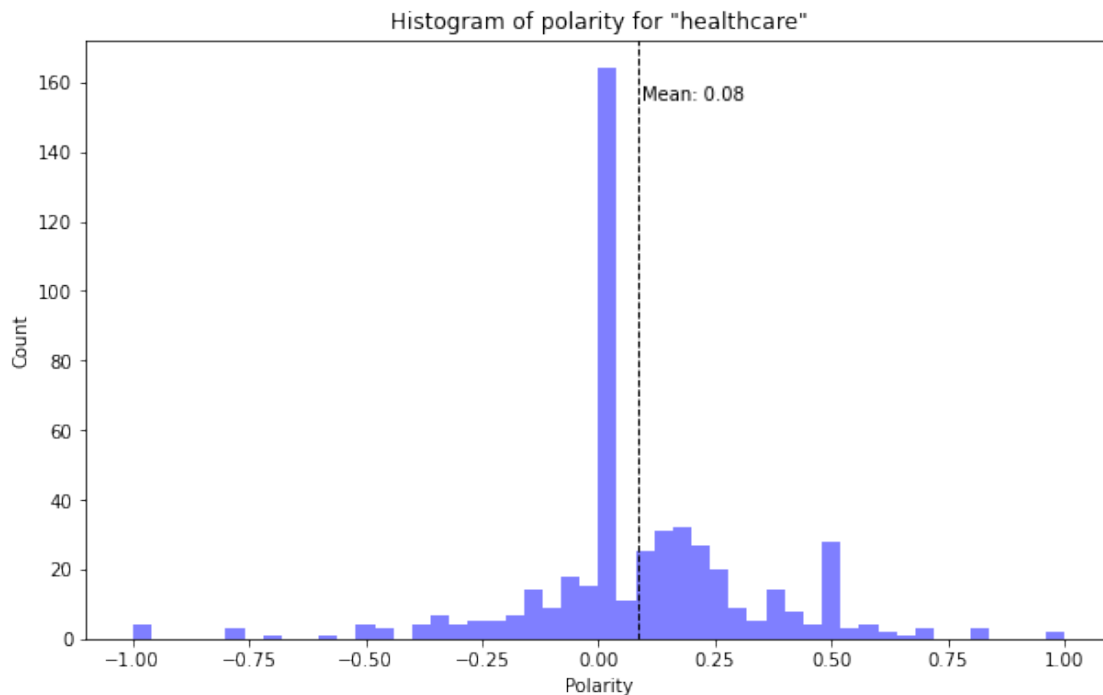

Figure 3

Similar to Figure 2, this histogram chart shows us in more detail the differences in polarity from all the tweets analyzed. It tells us a more accurate account of how many tweets fell to a certain negativity or positivity rate. What it shows us is how many tweets were seen as neutral or positive in this region. It also allows us to get an understanding that the users in this region have a more positive outlook with the term “healthcare.” Again, this chart could be used to compare tweets made from several months before to analyze a timeline on how positivity or negativity has changed.

1.4 Conclusion

Although this is a preliminary study using Twitter analysis, it does allow us to compare different regions and understand their polarity and popular tweets. However, it is also important to keep in mind the use of bots and words that represent sarcasm that could not be filtered when creating these visualizations. So some positive words could be sarcastic and same goes with negative words. Overall, this preliminary study gives us an opportunity to look into regions with higher/lower income and regions with different percentages in race for Twitter analysis.

I worked on the region of South Central Los Angeles and my partner did work on the region of West Los Angeles.
